Portfolio Commentary

January marked another good month for Alaya, following its inception in December. At the same time, we continued ramping-up the portfolio which now includes eight core positions. We plan to initiate two positions, a Global Macro fund and an Event Driven funds, in the first days of February.

Investors violently flipped their risk-aversion sentiment after Christmas in all asset classes. A pronounced V-shaped turnaround made the equity markets post their best month in more than eight years delivering only a return to pre-crash levels. Despite slowing growth projections, continued geopolitical risks and pressure on earnings were overwhelmed by the newly found dovishness of the FED which capitulated on the Q4 2018 market crash. As a result, short-term interest rates went from pricing more than two increases in 2019 to nil. European countries are promising tax cuts or more public spending while China has drastically moved from credit tightening to easing. The market-supporting punch-bowl (also known as Fed's put) that was supposed not to be refilled by the gentle waiters (Central Banks and governments) as the supportive party relentlessly comes to an end was temporarily extended for an after-hour session. It is hard to say if this new loose scenario (rather bullish for risk assets) is strong enough to support a rally in the months to come.

Looking forward, Q1 expected earnings paths are now in negative territory, down from more than 6% at the end of September! It is hard not to see the contradiction between a strong equity market and a sharp decline in earnings growth. The power of the punch bowl is for now still strong enough to offset the bad news from the real economy.

We continue to diversify our portfolio, particularly in Event Driven (e.g. M&A strategies) and Global Macro strategies. All invested funds carry low market sensitivity as proven by their defensive December-January performance. As we protect for the massive drops like December's, we partially give-up a portion of the upside in months like January 2019 to deliver a strong level of downside protection with attractive returns. An ideal risk-adjusted performance profile. We also keep a high level of geographical diversification, both in events and asset class exposure. The combination of market neutrality and high geographical diversification make our fund rather unique.
